models that approximate the functional relationships between performance characteristics and design variables. These approximation models, called response surface models, are then used to integrate the disciplines using mathematical programming methods for efficient system level design analysis, MDO and fast sensitivity simulations.

ADDIE Model The Dick and Carey Model Named for its developers, the Dick and Carey model (Figure 11-2) is the most widely known and used ADDIE-type model (Dick, Carey, and Carey, 2014). It is taught in most introductory college and university instructional design courses.

The dose-response relationship for human exposures to T. gondii-infected meat is unknown because no human data are available. The goal of this study was to develop and validate dose-response models based on animal studies, and to compute scaling factors so that animal-derived models can predict T. gondii infection in humans.
