Distant Shores opens with this quote from Homer in the Odyssey, and I consider this quote to be perfect for Voyager. I also think that this book with 12 different stories, with one being split into two parts, is an amazing idea.

Distant Shores by Marco Palmieri - Goodreads

Throughout our 27 years of international cruising, Sheryl and I have sailed over 100,000 nm and 40,000 of those miles have been sailed on the two lifting-keel yachts - Distant Shores, a Southerly 42 and Distant Shores II, a Southerly 49. Many people have asked what it is like to sail such a boat, how they sail upwind, what to do in storms, what happens if you hit the keel, what to do in huge waves and more.

I like that "Distant Shores" can crave a lot of the fans wondering about certain events and specifics that in between episodes have been overlooked. But a lot of the books published during the show's running could not do much to alter the characters, drastically balance and reshape them and plot them in a new course.

After having incinerated one too many dance floors and counting with Distant Shores, Petar Dundov is back with Tenth Plateau. The title track, a fifteen minute glide down the inner cosmos, makes many stops and delivers plenty memorable moments in its fifteen minutes.

In Distant Shores Editor Marco Palmieri has brought together a blend of veteran Star Trek authors and newer voices to pay tribute to the 10th anniversary of the series with a beautifully balanced collection of stories that accomplish something I did not think was possible; reading the stories within its pages made me feel nostalgic for Voyager.
