Going to war with Britain was required if the United States was to maintain its sovereignty and its maritime rights. Congress agreed with President Madison and declared war on June 18, 1812, but the vote was far from unanimous. Representatives from the Western and Southern states, the primary beneficiaries of a victory over Britain, were in favor.

After the war Americans had a time of prosperity. They developed a sense of nationalism and became interested in the American flag. In 1818, Congress passed a law that said the flag should have 13 stripes for the 13 original colonies. A star would be added for each state that joined the Union. Today there are 50 stars on the flag.
